Section 2:

Short bio-data of the Nominee (max 500 words):

Nicknamed a project management Nerd in my working circles I love all things Project Management. I was bitten by the PM bug when I attended a PMP training in 2007. I loved the training so much that I sat and passed the exam exactly 3 days after the training. When PDU events and symposiums couldn't satisfy my appetite for methodologies I joined NTU 's Masters in systems and Project Management course that was previously started by an Executive member of the SPMI board. I have dabbled in waterfall, Agile, Scrum, Kanban and dream of being able to marry more systems thinking methodologies into Project management approaches. Despite a firm background in Telecommunications Engineering, Project management training has given me a passport to switch domains effectively. My CV features Telecom service providers, an equipment manufacturer, a managed service provider, movie VFX and most recently Banking organizations, running the gamut from Fortune 500 companies to start ups. The Projects themselves have ranged anywhere from new product launches, outsourcing transitions, data center relocations, process transformation to application development. Currently I am enjoying balancing work and a very interesting pet project- my son who has just started school and is my Primary stakeholder contributing to the bulk of the requirements of my spare time. Outside work and family I enjoy experimenting with gastronomy nouveau (just a fancy way of saying 'cooking without recipes') and thinking of creative ways of going non-tech for weekend entertainment.

Short description of how nominee intend to contribute to the chapter (max 500 words):

The chapter was one of the main reasons I got my Master's degree. Without SPMI I would have never been exposed to or pursued project management as a profession. Judging from the quality of questioning at the SPMI symposium alone over the past 8 years, there has been a sea change of difference in the maturity of the project management community. I would love to be able to give back to the group that has helped mold my professional persona. The Symposium alone is a tremendous initiative involving a significant amount of resources and benefitting hundreds of professionals like myself. I would definitely like to help organize this behemoth of an event along with facilitating the numerous other industry events organized throughout the year. One of the Eureka moments of my career came about when listening to a Case Study of a multi million dollar, multi year program ( a brainchild of Mr LKY) facilitated by the SPMI. I would love to be able to make these real life rock stars of Project Management more accessible to the PM community here in Singapore. Lastly, as a Female practicing project manager, I would be honored to represent women in the chapter and be a visual indicator of the inclusiveness of the Project Management community and inspire more women to pursue project management as a viable career path.
