

The Path from Innovation to Execution

Innovation is central to improving organisational development and efficiency. Despite widespread agreement about the role of innovation as a strategic enabler, organisations remain unclear on how to harness and nurture innovation as a creative force. As new processes, technologies and media become more pervasive, there is increasing expectation that private sector agencies will reflect these advances in the way they interact with individuals and businesses.

- SELECTING and prioritising the best ideas to support agency strategy
- PLANNING each individual idea using a step-by-step, scalable methodology
- EXECUTING the plans with a good view on time, cost and benefits management

Ravi Sahi
Regional Director, Client Solutions and Business Development , ESI International

Ravi has 20 years of project management experience in physical infrastructure development, strategy-based consulting, and information technology in the financial services sector. With widespread, cross-industry experience on many cross-border engagements, Ravi has a keen understanding and appreciation of the criticality of focused, disciplined, and effective project management.

Along with his MBA (Strategy & Finance) he is also certified as a Project Management Professional (PMP®) by the Project Management Institute (PMI®), is a Stanford Certified Project Manager (SCPM), holds a master's certification in project management from The George Washington University and a certified SCRUM master (CSM).